

Maternal Pedagogies: In and Outside the Classroom

Edited by Deborah Byrd and Fiona J. Green

"This book brings up a plethora of important questions about the changing definitions of motherhood in different contexts, cultures and historical periods, and across different mediums of communication and educational settings (both formal and informal). The editors have created a provocative collection of essays on what is a relatively new and under-theorized topic for both women's studies and education. The contributors present a great mix of narrative styles—combining personal and anecdotal examples with sound research, analysis, and intellectual scholarship.

—Alice E. Ginsberg, author/editor of Gender in Urban Education, Gender and Educational Philanthropy, The Evolutions of American Women's Studies, and And Finally We Meet: Intersections and Intersectionality Among Feminist Activists, Academics and Students

"In a collection that demonstrates the fluid integration of theory and practice, Maternal Pedagogies provides a dynamic, diverse, and deft range of voices and experiences. Its exploration of critical, complex, creative, and challenging mothering relationships and locations examine pivotal questions surrounding advocacy, agency, and activism in terms that inform, renew, and often inspire. It is a work that compels continuing engagement and action."

—Deborah Schnitzer, Professor and National 3M Teaching Fellow, Department of English, The University of Winnipeg
